

AVIATION SAFETY THREATS ON THE RISE AMIDST GEOPOLITICAL TENSION

News / Airlines

Virgin Atlantic has renewed its partnership with Osprey Flight Solution extending its five-year relationship for a further three years to support safe, efficient and effective global operations. As airlines face evolving operational pressures, from regulatory complexity to shifting geopolitical tensions, intelligence has become an essential tool for maintaining business continuity and mitigating risks. Virgin Atlantic's daily security process includes the use of Osprey's platform, enabling its teams to assess risks quickly, adapt flight planning in real time and avoid disruption.

Nigel Williams, Global Head of Security, Virgin Atlantic, commented: "The growing geopolitical instability has made Osprey's aviation risk platform a must have for us. As an airline, we have a responsibility to our passengers in ensuring they are protected during their journey. The unrivalled insight Osprey delivers is absolutely vital for running our business securely, giving us the confidence to make timely, informed decisions that keep our operations running smoothly."

Andrew Nicholson, Chief Executive Officer, Osprey Flight Solutions, stated: "We've seen an increase in airspace closures and disruptions that have impacted not only airlines but airports, business aviation operators and insurance companies. Virgin Atlantic's renewal underlines the fundamental role intelligence plays in modern aviation operations, and we're proud of the support we've provided through our longstanding relationship with the airline. By embedding intelligence at the core of its operations, Virgin Atlantic has established itself as a leader in overflight risk management and created a model for how airlines can mitigate both economic and passenger disruption."
